Excerpt: . . . transferred the volumes to Mrs. Grenville, with the observation, that there was a great deal about Rome in it! Constance, to escape any farther enquiries now crossed to the other side of the room, for the ostensible purpose of borrowing a pencil of Mrs. Grenville;--and as she drew near, caught the tones of Mrs. Courtlands voice: -- Well, really, exclaimed that lady, in a sort of audible whisper, though I did vote for the book, for I knew it was Mrs. Joness wish, yet I cannot regret that it is negatived: --I hope I like what is good as well as any body;--but upon my word fifty-six sermons in four days are more than I can undertake. Mrs. Courtland was somewhat ruffled when she made this confession: --she had rashly proposed a magnificent publication, with superb illustrations, proportionably expensive; at which the prudent and economical took fright, and the book was consequently black-balled. It is quite right, quite proper, I dare say, whispered she to Mrs. Grenville, in a tone of ill-suppressed vexation. -- I ought not to have proposed it;--but I think the thing might have been done, if there had been a spirit of accommodation;--however, I feel the less obliged. Our funds will not allow us the indulgence at present, replied Mrs. Grenville, who was one of the guilty party: -- not to admit so beautiful a book must be a sacrifice: -- our poverty but not our will consents: --perhaps after...
