Fellow-Citizens: Before this reaches you, the term of our service as your representatives in Congress will have expired. In laying down the high and responsible trust which was bestowed upon us with a generous confidence, we should not feel that we had discharged our whole duty if we failed to furnish you with the means of thoroughly scrutinizing the principles which have guided us. We were indebted to your zealous devotion to democratic republicanism for the distinguished honor we have enjoyed of representing you in the councils of the nation. Feeling conscious that the same devotion to democracy has actuated us in the discharge of our duties, which animated you in conferring the trust, our earnest wish now is to satisfy you that your confidence has not been abused. Economy In The Public Expenditures. At the head of republican virtues, we place...
