Excerpt from The Teaching of Reading: A Manual to Accompany Everyday Classics Books Seven and Eight The general aims of the Everyday Classic Series have been already set forth at sufficient length in a Manual called The Teaching of Reading, written to accompany the Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth books of the series. These aims may therefore be restated here quite briefly. The series includes almost wholly such selections as are not only well known, but are of approved standing in the world of children's interests. In a few instances, in the later books, a selection of comparatively recent date has been admitted; but only in case it has already received wide and unanimous approval from such sources as commonly render an enduring verdict on literature. It has been the purpose of the editors to make these Readers unquestionably a collection of everyday classics. Since they are intended for children and not for educated adults, the classics chosen are simple in theme and diction, as well as of universal interest. The subtle and ornate, the profound...
