Neuware - Diploma Thesis from the year 2004 in the subject Business economics - Trade and Distribution, grade: 1,0, University of Applied Sciences Saarbrücken (Betriebswirtschaft), language: English, abstract: Inhaltsangabe:Abstract: One of the most considerable trends in today's business environment seems to be the increase in the internationalisation of firms and markets. International expansion represents a chance for companies to achieve further growth and may also become a necessity when international competition gets intense even in the domestic market. Thus, not only large-scale companies integrate the internationalisation of business activities into their strategic and operational business planning, but also small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) realise that internationalisation is an inescapable step within the dynamic market environment. In particular the European Union (EU) represents such a dynamic market environment. With several accession negotiations (Northern enlargement 1972, Southern enlargement 1981/1986, Eastern enlargement 1995) it increased from six to 15 member states. Another ten states, namely, Hungary, Poland, the Czech Republic, Slovakia, Slovenia, Latvia, Lithuania, Malta, Cyprus and Estonia joined the EU in May 2004. Bulgaria and Romania hope to become part of the EU in 2007. The enlarged EU of finally 27 countries will account for a population of nearly half a billion people creating a huge market potential. Within the EU, it has been especially the transition economies in Central and Eastern Europe that have been opening up new trading opportunities for European companies. In particular the Baltic Sea region can be seen as the fastest growing business region in Europe. The trade flows as well as the foreign direct investments (FDI) have been significantly increasing year by year. With its consequent liberalisation policy pursued since 1991 Estonia has become...
