Not illustrated. 1822 Excerpt: . . . which set in strong against them. Finding that to be impossible, they wisely gave way to it; and the consequence was, that immediately afterwards the church was crowded in every quarter to excess. We were so fortunate as to obtain a seat in the front gallery, and on looking down into the chancel, we found it to be quite filled with the mourners who belonged to the family of these two unfortunate victims of military execution. The men who held the two banners which we have before noticed, placed themselves in the pew of her late Majesty, which, as well as the pulpit, was covered with black cloth, in consequence, of her decease. The banners themselves, covered as they were with crape, added to the picturesque appearance of the place, and increased the general melancholy which had been inspired by the sight of the...
