Excerpt: . gods of Hellas back again, whereas he merely casts back a last fond look on the ideals incorporated in his conception of the Greek world of beauty--on Nature vergottert instead of die entgotterte Natur of the present world. It is not a hymn in praise of Greek polytheism--for this was to him, as it must be to all moderns, a dead and alien faith--but an elegiac renunciation of the lost paradise of that age. In a similar mood Wordsworth, disgusted with modern materialism and utilitarianism, wrote his sonnet, The world is too much with us. Analysis: 1-8, Contrast between the Greek world of light and beauty and the present age; 9-16, the Greek imagination peopled Nature with divine beings; 17-32, examples from Greek mythology; 33-40, the gods even descended to earth and mingled with mortals, drawn by Love; 41-48, instead of gloomy self-abnegation,...
